

VI. ANALYSIS OF RESOURCE REQUIREMENTS

Most of the proposals outlined in this report can be initiated with existing resources but will require additional support as the implementation proceeds. By continuing to develop the Center's holdings through accessioning and solicitation, additional demands will be placed on the archival staff to keep pace with the increasing workload. Improving the level of description of contemporary records also will require additional staff hours.

The Advisory Committee reiterates its 1991 recommendation that two positions (for a GS-12 conservator and a GS-7 conservator aide) be dedicated to the previously described preservation requirements of legislative records.

The Advisory Committee recognizes that as exhibits, educational initiatives, and publications continue to be a large part of the Center's agenda, additional resources will be required, including private-sector grants that such public outreach programs can attract.

Other initiatives outlined in this report, such as expanding the scope of electronic access to the records of Congress, will require additional resources in the Center and assistance from various NARA offices.
