

MRS. CARAWAY ENTERS SENATORIAL PRIMARIES

Seeks Renomination for Regular Term—Four Men Also in Arkansas Race.

WASHINGTON, May 9 (AP).—Mrs. Hattie Caraway of Arkansas, first woman to be elected to the Senate, tonight filed notice of her candidacy for renomination in the State Democratic primary of Aug. 9. Her decision was made after long consideration.

She took the place of her late husband, Senator Thaddeus Caraway, last Fall by appointment of the Governor of Arkansas. Subsequently, Mrs. Caraway received the endorsement of the Democratic State Central Committee for renomination to fill out the unexpired term of Senator Caraway. She was nominated and elected.

Tonight Mrs. Caraway filed for renomination in the election for a regular term. Her present term ends next March 4.

In the contest for the nomination the Arkansas woman faces a real fight. Four candidates, including a former Senator and a former Governor, are in the race.

It was with some hesitancy that Mrs. Caraway, a novice in politics, and the mother of two sons, entered the contest, but friends who have watched her record in her brief tenure of office urged her to do it.

Mrs. Caraway quietly announced her own program today when, after sitting in the chair of the Vice President, she remarked, "I like to keep my feet on the ground." That was her complaint about sitting in the chair of the presiding officer, the first woman to do so.

She said she could not keep her feet on the floor in that chair.
