Feb. 21, 1969

Pursuant to the order of the Senate, and by appointment of the President pro tempore, Senator Carl Hayden of Arizona, I this day read Washington's Farewell Address.

I have read this address many times before. Somehow the reading of it aloud, in the Senate Chamber, reconstructed for me, for the first time, the quiet concern, wisdom, patriotism, and love of country which motivated Washington to write it. It is obvious that we have not followed his advice to the letter, but it is also clear that the same moral force which enabled him to lead our country through its perils has also shown us the truth of a powerful example.

[Signature]

Washington, D.C.